er elements of painting, are only the means to a larger end, which is the depiction of man and his world.

"Today, mere textural novelty is being presented by a dominant group of museum officials, dealers, and publicity men as the unique manifestation of the artistic intuition. This arbitrary exploitation of a single phase of painting encourages a contempt for the taste and intelligence of the public. We are asked to believe that art is for the future, that only an inner circle is capable of judging contemporary painting, that everybody else must take it on faith. These theories are fixed in a ritual jargon equally incomprehensible to artist and layman. This jargon is particularly confusing to young artists, many of whom are led to accept the excitation of texture and color as the citation of texture and color as the excitation of texture and color as the citation of texture and color a comprehensible to artist and layman. This jargon is particularly confusing to young artists, many of whom are led to accept the excitation of texture and color as the true end of art, even to equate disorder with creation. The dogmatic order with creation. The dogmatic season.

to Be Given This Week

MONROE—"Twelve Moons" has been chosen as the title of the junior Orchesis dance demonstration to be given Wednesday and Thursday nights in the Monroe high school auditorium. Mrs. Grace Anderson, girls' physical education teacher, is director.

Each month will be symbolized by a distinctive dance, Mrs. Anderson said.

This will be the organization's sixth annual program.
