Legislator Gets Train Service—of a Sort

WEEDSPORT, N. Y. (AP) — Assemblyman Charles A. Cusick is a persistent man who gets things done.

Cusick tired of his weekly 25-mile drive to Syracuse to catch a train to Albany for legislative sessions. He thought it would be fine if he could catch the eastbound train which hinders right through Weedsport without stopping.

Cusick talked with railroad officials in Syracuse. Then he had more talks in New York City.

Apparently it took a resolution by the New York Central board of directors, but finally the train stopped at Weedsport.

Well, almost. The station here was razed a year ago, and the engineer almost missed the stop. Cusick had to walk a quarter of a mile to get his train.

Eisenhower Gets Real Southern Cooking

ATLANTA, Ga. (UP) — The grandmother of President Eisenhower's personal cook says the president is getting genuine southern cooking because that's about all her grandson knows.

Sallie Martin said Sgt. Hayward Hines, who followed Mr. Eisenhower from the Army to the White House, knows "just about every Southern recipe there is."

The sergeant is a native of Chipley, Ga., and learned how to cook from his great-grandmother, 85-year-old Gladie Marsh, who still lives there.

"He was learning cooking from the time he was six or seven years old until he went into the Army in 1943," the sergeant's grandmother said.

"If you want to go dancing, follow us," McCrary said he followed the girls but lost them because his car was too slow.

McCrary was fined $35 after he told this tale:

Two girls in a car pulled along side his automobile and shouted,

Coronation Held TV Lesson

By WILLIAM L. DOUDNA (State Journal Radio-TV Editor)

There was a lesson for radio and television announcers in NBC's broadcasts and telecasts of the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II.

The lesson was given by Sir Ralph Richardson, narrator of the TV program and whoever wrote his lines—if he used a script.

His work was proof that special-event descriptions can be intelligent and concise without any loss of interest or of color. Here was a masterpiece of careful choice of words, delivered with a restraint which served to emphasize the contrasting vastness of sound and the majesty of sights with which they were matched—and to preserve the essential reverence and dignity of the ceremonies.

On the other hand, radio listeners were spared the unwavering, almost ghostly and hypnotic stare of the English actor, who never once blinked his eyes during the long sequences in which his face filled the screen.

On NBC radio, John Snagge, dean of British Broadcasting Co. commentators, did an equally convincing and revealing job.

Viewers in some parts of Madison found, unexpectedly, that WNBQ (Chicago) was giving them a better signal than WTMJ-TV (Milwaukee) for the night-time showing of the coronation films.

Some recommended Columbia records of the past month or so, some of which have been mentioned here before but deserve reiteration:

Arthur Godfrey and Andre Kostelanetz orchestras: "Peter and the Wolf." If you've been afraid of what Godfrey might do with this, forget your fears.

It's a pleasant recording. With "Peter" on this LP are Kern's "Mark Twain" and Grofé's "Mississippi Suite," both well if not handsomely done.

Benay Goodman: "Eddie Sauter Arrangements" and "Fletcher Henderson Arrangements," two 12-inch LPs, sold separately. The former has Sauter works done in the early '40s, including some never before issued—"Moonlight on the Ganges," "Love Walked In," and "Ramona." All of it is tangy stuff. The Henderson arrangements date back to the '30s, and include "Stealin' Apples," "Henderson Stomp," and "Honeyuckle Rose."

Danny Kaye: "Danny Kaye Entertainers," a 10-inch LP. While this is a must for Kaye fans, it's entertaining for the rest of us too, with Tschalkowsky, "The Princess of Pure Delights," "Jenny," and others.

Albert Schweitzer: The legendary doctor recorded three sets of Bach works on the organ in the Gumbach church in which he played as a boy. The result substantiates the legend of Schweitzer's genius for those of us who do not have his 1936-38 records. This playing is neither ecstatic nor varied, but it is reverential and, at first hearing, deceptive; you should hear it several times. Besides chorale-pretudes, toccatas, fugues, and other works by Bach, the set includes Mendelssohn's "Sonata," No. 6, which Schweitzer calls the composer's "finest organ work."

Jesus Maria Samarra: MacDowell's "Piano Concerto No. 2," with the Eastman-Rochester orchestra under Howard Hanson. A brilliant recording of a neglected piano work, whose scherzo is one of most listenable in piano literature. Hanson keeps a remarkable balance between orchestra and solo instrument, and the engineering quality is high. The second side holds Hanson's "Romantic" symphony, with the composer conducting the same orchestra. Again, the music and mechanical qualities are high.

Penguins Can't Fly--But Try

Five questions about penguins have come to me from two boys, Douglas Bell and Melvin Waskow. They ask:

"In what different places do penguins live? What other birds are their relatives? What kinds of food do they eat? Are they good swimmers? How many eggs does a penguin lay at once?"

Penguins live south of the equator. Some of them are found on and around the Galapagos islands, but in general they live farther south. They raise young on many islands of the South Temperate Zone, also along the coasts of Chile and Argentina. They are the chief birds of the frozen Antarctic continent.

Birds Without Flight

Penguins make up a special family in the bird world. We hardly can say that they have any close relatives, but the grebes have several points in common with them.

Only a few kinds of birds are without the power of flight. Ostriches can run fast, but their wings fall to lift them into the air. Penguins are very poor at running; they waddle more than they walk. Never do the wings of a penguin lift it into the air.

When it comes to swimming, penguins are experts. They move their wings rapidly while under water, and this helps to give them speed. They also have webbed feet which assist them while they swim.

"Hatching" Ice Lumps

Usually a penguin's nest has two eggs, but the large emperor penguin lays only one egg. Certain penguins have been found seated on lumps of ice about the size of their eggs, and it is supposed that they were trying to hatch the lumps of ice!

Penguins eat whatever shellfish they can find in their home waters. They also chase and capture several kinds of fish.

Young penguins are covered with down, and keep the down much longer than most birds. Several months pass before feathers take the place of the downy covering. Usually the feathers are black and white, but some penguins have dark blue feathers about their heads and backs, and right, it makes a queer sight. The yellowish feathers on their breasts, emperor penguin is the largest of all, and is four feet in height. The gull in "looking like a man." Walk-smallest member of the tribe is leg along with head and body up—the little Adelic penguin.
