Bill Doudna's SPOTLIGHT 'A Doll's House'

TIP OF THE MORNING: Van Johnson expects to return to Broadway as star of "7½ Cents," musical version of the novel by Richard Bissell of Dubuque. Johnson left the stage 10 years ago; his last New York show was "Pal Joey."

SUCCESS OF ANY performance of "A Doll's House" depends largely upon the successful portrayal of Nora Helmer. Consequently, the Repertory Theater's production of the Ibsen drama is successful.

At Wednesday night's opening, Anne Soule gave a vivid, intense, and almost wholly satisfying picture of the harassed woman who finally emerges from the dream life in what has become, for her, in truth a doll's house.

There was only one flaw in Mrs. Soule's work, and some in the audience will debate this point, I'm sure. It was the tautness of her playing in the early scenes, apparently intended to foreshadow impending drama but succeeding mostly in making her husband look stupid, which he was not.

Torvald Helmer was a supreme egoist, ultra-conservative and convinced of his wife's utter dependence upon him and her adulation of him. Charles Mark played him that way, but Nora's nervousness and departure from her normal attitudes were so obvious that only an extremely dull man could have overlooked them.

This facet of the portrayal may have helped the audience understand Nora better, but it weakened the role of her husband.

Nevertheless, both Mrs. Soule's performance and the production as a whole must stand as high points in our summer season.

One in modern dress, the 19th century play retained its impact as drama all the way through, with a superb climax in Nora's torrent of words as she told Torvald why she was leaving him until the "wonderful thing" which she had dreamed — his understanding of her predicament — happens.

Others in the cast were equally well played—Joseph Hawes as the man whose threat to Nora's security leads her to the truth about her marriage and herself; Helen Arizzen as a lifelong friend around whom a second phase of the plot revolved; Don Soule as the doomed friend of the household, Dr. Rank, and even Donna Wenger in her brief part as a maid.

The play will be repeated at 8:30 nightly through Saturday.

NEW SCREEN: The Capitol theater's new "Cinemascope" screen was used for the first time Wednesday with showings of "Shane." The concave screen is about three times as large as the old, flat one.
