JACOBY ON

BRIDGE By Oswald Jacoby

THERE is a great difference between a bridge hand as it is played in the books and the same hand as it may be played at the table by human beings. One difference is that you can't fool the books but you can fool human beings. The point is illustrated by today's hand, taken from last year's national championships.
South reached the perfectly logical opening lead of the king of diamonds. The play proceeded for a while just as it would in the books. The defenders took two diamond tricks, and West then led the ten of spades. South correctly decided that West would not make so danger-West would not make so dangerous a lead if he had the queen of spades, and he therefore played a low spade from the dummy and won with the king in his own hand. He drew trumps in two rounds, cashed the ace of spades, and gave up

At this point, the hand is over from the book point of view. East must return a club (since a diamond return would allow declarer to ruff in one hand and discard a club from the other),

Opening lead—

A South merely plays for the club honors to be split. For example, suppose East returns the deuce of clubs.

South plays low, and West must play the jack to force out dummy's king. Dummy now returns a club, and South finesses the ten. South thus makes his contract, and the book is happy. When the hand is played by live human beings, an expert East would see this situation and would return the queen of clubs instead of a low club. This gives South something to think about.

Should South still play the first still play the still play the first should south still play the first should sho

Should South still play the clubs honors to be split (in other words, take the ace of clubs and finesse through West for the jack of clubs), or should South assume that East has led from a club holding headed by the queen and jack? The point is that South has to guess, and there is quite a possi-
