Bill Doudna's SPOTLIGHT 'Voice of the Turtle'

TIP OF THE MORNING: Fredric March is being sought to play the title role in "My Uncle Louie," a sequel to "The Happy Time," on Broadway.

SOPHISTICATED COMEDY which is bright and blithe, rather than base and brittle, is a rare thing in the theater, but "The Voice of the Turtle" is just that as played by the Repertory Theater.

John Van Druten's play, now 10 years old and little tarnished by time, opened Wednesday night at the group's playhouse in the Woman's bldg., and will continue through Saturday. Curtain time is 8:30 p.m.

The talents of Donna Wenger and Don and Anne Soule were more adequate for the comedy's three roles. George Bird's direction and setting combined to make remarkably clever use of the small available space. The design and the action meshed to give an illusion of space and freedom of movement.

One of the things that keeps "The Voice of the Turtle" a living bit of theater is the touch of pathos in the character of Sally, and Miss Wenger made one feel the girl's fear of disillusionment under a surface of utter ingenueness. Soule's attitude toward her, in the role of a sergeant on furlough, was pitched to the right degree of tenderness to emphasize that facet of the tiny actress' portrayal.

Anne Soule played the wise, dry-witted maternal friend with just enough sophistication to make her real, and even made one feel a bit sorry for her at the play's end.

The story should be familiar by now. It has been played often, and has been borrowed from, too. It is about an actress who, suddenly finding an old flame in town in the uniform of a Navy lieutenant commander, stands up a more recent acquisition who is only an Army sergeant. She introduces him to her young friend, also an actress, and loses him, her.

Much of the fun comes from Van Druten's sharp use of theatrical cliches, knowingly played for laughs; his alternately sly and broad references to extramarital love, and his expert and compact writing.

And, of course, from the company's accomplished acting.

Skeptic Thinks Cat Licensing Useless

ERIE, Pa. (UP)—The Erie county treasurer, Hayes McCreary, thinks the lack of sociability on the part of cats makes it unfeasible to license them as has been proposed by a bill in the legislature.

McCreary, who handles the county collections for dog licenses, wanted to know, "how are you going to prove cats belong to anybody?"

"They run away when called instead of coming as dogs do," he added.

City to Move Some City Hall Fixtures

Staff members of the city building inspection department started Wednesday to measure doors throughout the old city hall.

It was announced that some of the doors, windows, transoms, and lighting fixtures in the old building will be moved to the municipal garage building at W. Washington ave. and S. Bedford st., which will be remodeled as a temporary city hall.

Some city officials saw a possibility of vacating the old city hall by Nov. 1. The city has an assured tenancy at least until next February under terms of the building's sale, for $280,000, to an eastern firm, presumably as the future site of a large department store.

Architects representing the new owners were said to have inspected the old building a few days ago.

Clinton D. Smith Found Suckers--Maybe Even You

DETROIT (UP)—You may not know Clinton D. Smith—but it's possible he bilked you of some hard earned cash.

Smith told all Wednesday in a 14-page confession to police—outlining confidence schemes starting on the west coast and extending cross-country into Michigan.

A native of Red Wing, Minn., the 42-year-old Smith's formula for success in making easy money is simple: "Make all sorts of fantastic claims. People will believe anything."

Like the policemen in Oakland, Calif., who took orders for some of Smith's personalized cigars at $5 a box, Smith didn't deliver the stogies.

Or the untold numbers of people who paid a small amount down for a home freezer or bought a ticket to a rodeo. Neither was seen.

"It's much easier to sell people something you don't have," he said. "You can make all sorts of fantastic claims. People will believe anything."

Smith was arrested when two detectives overheard him arguing with a man who was indignant that Smith had used his name to borrow $200 from a finance company.

JACOBY ON BRIDGE

By Oswald Jacoby

Today's hand is the sort that an expert never misplays. He makes the right play automatically, even if he is half asleep at the time, whereas the average player may sometimes make the wrong play even if he is wide awake at the time.

There is nothing magic about this difference. It's just a matter of having worked out the combination of cards once for all, after which the expert can recognize the situation without ever having to think about it again.

Maybe if we work it out now, any reader who is uncertain about the correct play will be able to play this combination correctly for the rest of his life.

West opens the queen of clubs against the sound contract of four spades. South wins with the king of clubs and naturally decides to draw trumps immediately in order to safeguard his contract.

If South begins the trumps by leading the king or the queen, he is a dead duck. East will eventually get a trump trick, and South will surely also lose three heart tricks.

South's reasoning should go something like this: "I can easily draw the trumps unless one opponent has all four of them. If West has all four in this case, he is sure to win a trump trick, and there is nothing that I can do about it. Let's see what I can do if East has all four of the trumps."

After some thought, South sees that the correct plan is to begin the trumps by leading a low trump to dummy's ace. When West discards a club the situation is quite clear. Dummy therefore returns a low trump, and East must play the ten (otherwise South would successfully finesse the nine of spades). South must now get back to dummy with the king of diamonds in order to lead another trump through East. A finesse is sure to succeed since East has the jack-eight of spades and South has the king-nine. After taking this finesse, South can draw the last trump and claim two tricks.

We can cover this situation with a general rule. If you are missing four trumps headed by the jack-ten, win the first trump trick in the hand that has a single high trump. This leaves you in position to take two finessses if it turns out that the appropriate defender has all four of the trumps. If the trumps break normally, no finesse is necessary; and if the wrong defender has all four trumps, you can do nothing about it.
