FEATURE: Stalag 17
TYPE: Comedy-Drama
REVIEWER: Don Davies

CAST: Sefton, William Holden; Lt. Dunbar, Don Taylor; Oberst Von Scherbach, Otto Preminger; Stosh, Robert Strauss; Harry, Hawk, Lembeck; Holly, Richard Erdman; Price, Peter Graves; Duke, Neville Brand; Schulz, Sig Ruman.

PLOT: A group of airmen, 630 sergeants, is interned in Stalag 17, notorious German prison camp. Scheming to find ways of helping members of the group to escape, they find that a foolproof plan backfires and two of the airmen are killed. Sefton (Holden), a cynical GI who works up rackets in the barracks and trades with the Germans for special privileges, is immediately suspected and beaten. He sets out to find the real spy and make possible another escape attempt for himself and Lt. Dunbar (Taylor), who is wanted by the Germans for sabotage.

HIGH POINTS: Hilarious dialog and antics of "men of barracks," especially Stosh, the Animal, and Harry; good adaptation from Broadway play to screen; scenes of Mein Kampf lecture, Stosh and Harry painting their way into the Russian women's compound, Sefton's barracks racing concession and telescope; Christmas party.

VERDICT: Picture as a whole will be one of the hits of the year.

14 Years of News of World

(On Monday, the National Broadcasting Co. will mark the beginning of "News of the World's" 14th year on the air. The program is broadcast by NBC-WIBA Monday through Friday at 6:30 p.m.)

(Paul Archinard, who wrote this guest column, was the first NBC overseas correspondent of "News of the World." He still reports on that program.)

By PAUL ARCHINARD

Our first "News of the World" broadcast from Paris on Aug. 24, 1939, preceded the outbreak of World War II by a few days. Three days before the news of Hitler's non-aggression pact with the USSR brought me flying back from Milan, Italy, where I had been able to visit with Maestro Toscanini. The streets of Paris were even then dimmed out, and everyone felt deep down inside that war was now inevitable.

We had broadcast other war scares before—in March, 1939, when Czechoslovakia had ceased to be a state; in September, 1938, when Hitler had taken over Austria.

These were grimly ominous stories to tell as compared with the ones we had narrated since my first spot for NBC on Bastille Day in 1936. As NBC stringer in Paris from July, 1936, to February, 1939, when NBC had appointed me staff correspondent, I reported many events, such as the solemn inauguration of American battle monuments in France and Belgium during the year 1937, and many events at the Paris World's Fair.

In 1939, we covered everything of note, including the visit of King George VI to France, Howard Hughes' record-breaking flight across the Atlantic, the two-way broadcast between West Point and Saint Cyr Military academy near Paris, and even a gypsy pilgrimage in southern France. In 1939, we also reported the aftermath of the Spanish Civil war from the Pyrenees border and gave a series of variety programs from Paris night spots.

Shortly after the first "News of the World" first war correspondent on the Allied front. Our broadcast then originated either from Paris or the French HQ at La-Ferte-sous-Journe. We'd go into the Marston line, then ride back through the night 150 miles to La-Ferte-sous-Journe.

That's what we called a "phony" war; in fact, the real thing for the West started in Dunkerque. On June 3, 1940, the German Luftwaffe bombed Paris for the first time. Lifting my apartment office wide open, and changing the subject of a broadcast was preparing for the moment. A week later, we followed the government to Tours in a bewildering exodus that didn't even end in Bordeaux (for NBC broke the news of Premier Renault's resignation and of the armistice), for then came Vichy.

Less than a month after the armistice, I was back on the air from Vichy, through the League of Nations' old transmitter near Geneva, and thanks to the assistance of the French and Swiss radio, these were tongue-in-cheek reports, with censors breathing down our necks, and when America came in the war and Admiral Lee left the U. S. embassy in Vichy, my presence as a silenced broadcaster became suspicious to many people, and downright embarrassing to me.

Fortunately, NBC transferred me to Berne in April, 1942. With Axis and Allied intelligence agents swarming over the place, I surveyed and reported European events from the citadel that the Allies. To be seen in the Paris beat since my return from Berne in February, 1945.

Egypt's Bird of Good Fortune

People of ancient Egypt marked out certain birds which followed the Nile flood each year. They arrived in northern and central Egypt at about the same time as the spreading waters.

These birds belonged to the ibis (pronounced EYE-bis) family. They measured about two and a half feet in length, counting the long, downward-curved bills. Most of their feathers were snow white, but they also had black plumes.

The long bills were useful to these birds, which waded into the edges of the flood waters to capture small fish and other "game."

Hundreds of mummies of ibises have been found in Egyptian tombs. The mummies point out the fact that the people of ancient Egypt used to think of the ibis as holy. Some of them wanted to take a few of the birds along with them to bring good fortune in their lives after death.

The ibis was supposed to be a messenger, or special servant, of the god called Thoth. There was a belief that ibises helped to bring the Nile flood, which provided water for crops. Another reason for the birds to be classed as holy was the fact that they destroyed small, but dangerous, snakes.

It is rare for anyone to see an ibis in the area of present-day Cairo or Alexandria. Birds of the same kind, however, remain common upstream in the valley of the Nile.

Other Ibis

Egypt is far from being the only home of ibises. India has many of them, and the straw-necked ibis is common in several marshy parts of Australia.

On our own continent we have the white curlew, also called the white ibis. This bird nests chiefly in the marshes of southern parts of the United States, but has been reported breeding in such northerly places as Vermont and South Dakota.

The plumage of a white ibis is all white except for black ends of some of the wing feathers and, in certain cases, short, dark feathers about the head. This ibis has a height of a bit more than two feet. Like other members of the ibis family, it is a wading bird.

The favorite home of the white ibis is a mangrove thicket. Crude but strong, nests are built in bushes and trees which are near water, often on branches above the water. From three to five eggs are laid in each nest. In a single large tree, beside a Florida lake, 47 white ibis nests were found.

WICKED NEVER SLEEP
FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP)—O. M. Boucher, owner of a package liquor store, decided to sleep at his place while it was undergoing repairs as a precaution against burglars. When he went home to get a cot to take to the store, someone broke into the place and took $100 worth of liquor.
