The legend of Glenn Miller and his orchestra has been recreated and expanded by RCA Victor in an elaborate. Iimited-edition album called simply "Glenn Miller."

called simply "Glenn Miller."

Bound in padded white, the set consists of 10 twelve-inch long-playing sides carrying an anthology of Miller's music from 1939 through September. 1942. Besides top-selling discs, it includes many off-the-air recordings never made available generally (although privately-made ones have been bootlegged). In the salbum, too, is a biography of Miller, plus information about

Miller, plus information about the band, the band.

For example we learn that in 1940 alone more than 3.000,000 copies of his records were sold and that his gross in come, including royalties from discs, topped $800,000.

Collectors also will find the names of the musicians used on each number—not only the original band, but the replacements. Among them are Al Mastren, Hal McIntyre, Tex Beneke, Billy May, Ray Anthony, Doc Goldberg, Bobby Hackett, and Wilbur Schwariz.

But all the handsomeness is not in the binding, nor the printed matter, nor the names. It ing, nor the printed matter, nor the names. It is in the music, a legend since New York dis-covered it at the Paramount theater in 1939. and since record-buyers found it on a Bluebird issue of "Neath the Spreading Chestnut Tree" in the same year,

Among the 60 selections (there are more tunes than that, because the discs include some tunes than that, because the discs include some medleys) are these:

"Careless," "Say Si Si," "King Porter Stomp," "Wonderful One." "One O'Clock Jump," "Mr. Meadowlark." "Little Brown Jug," "Farewell Blues," "Ida," "Perfidia," "Bugle Call Rag," "Chattanooga Choo Choo," "American Patrol," "String of Pearls, "Rhapsody in Blue," "Make Believe," and "Glen Island Special."

If you have a friend or relative who loves dance music—and especially Miller's—and you want to give him a rewarding Christmas gift, this is it. Despite the relatively high cost, the sets, are selling rapidly, we're told, so you'd better get moving.

better get moving.

Paul Lavalle, conductor of the "Band of Paul Lavalle, conductor of the "Band of America," has sent this department an autographed copy of his RCA Victor LP, "Sunday Band Concert," and it's a dandy.

Selections are "The Old Oaken Bucket," "United Press March!" (by Lavalle), "Listen to the Mocking Bird," with a piccolo solo by John Fulton, "Big Joe the Toha" (by Lavalle and Joe Tarto), "Spirit of Freedom," "Carnival of Venice," trumpet solo by James Burke; "Dixie," and "Ballyhoo March" (by Lavalle).

10's practically a band concert by itself, and

and "Ballyhoo March" (by Lavane).

It's practically a band concert by itself, and exciting as only band music can be.

Another choice recording is the Philadelphia orchestra's performance of Sibelius' "Lemmin-kainen Suite" (which includes the popular "Swan of Tuonela") under Eugene Ormandy's direction—a faithful reproduction of the tone pictures. It's a Columbia LP.

Security With Comfort

In records of the Old Stone Age in Europe, no proof has been found that the people had a religion of any kind. It seems likely that they lived their lives without thought of gods or godesses or spirits.

Big changes come about in the Late Stone Age in they were some, at least, who followed a religion.

Circles of stones are among the objects which lead to the belief they were able to see the light once more.

The sum was given worship in due course, there came to he counting of time by seasons. American Indians (who had the Late Stone Age culture) sometimes spoke of a person's age by selling the number of summers in the had lived.
