The Sunday Spotlight: A Guest Column The Art of Donald Anderson

By PROF JOHN F. KIENZT Department of Art History University of Wisconsin Sidney Bechet, one of its ablest exponents, once said of the real jazz that it was "three old men playing and nobody listening."

The drawings and paintings of Prof. Donald Anderson now on view in the Exhibition room of the new University library prove that when this authentic music of the Negro was being played, there was among its devotees at least one who was able to capture its essence in form, and color, and line.

In his pictorial record of jazz and some of the men who made it, Anderson brings to us as fine a transcription of its look and feel as has ever been made. He does this most notably in a group of five designs ranged on the south wall. There we have two versions of "Trumpet Practice" and two of "Back Stage" flanking a piece called "Practice."

"Practice" is a large, moody, ingeniously contrived, and pianist's portrait of a clarinetist. The man plays centrally out of a blue mood in a surround of angular, "cool" rhythms and accents of shrill, cutting line which seem oddly like those that Paewee Russell used to swirl out of the slick and make prevail over all else, when he had it, in the old days, at Nick's!

There are many other treatments here and they, too, do justice to this important facet of our musical life and art. They show tactful inventiveness, much insight into mood, perceptive analysis of truth, and a personal application of technique. Among these one of the most pleasing voices is "Cornet." Of this instrument Anderson makes a dark, quasi-musical abstract against mellow brown stains. Whoever anywhere has heard and been pleased by true sounds will hear in this sketch a touching echo of the lyric drive and happy phrasing of Bix, and Louie, and Spanier.

To his affection for the real jazz, Anderson adds an interest in the Madison landscape. In the white patterning of the butterfly fineness of color movement in nature, and, most poignantly, he also proves himself to be a master of the color in art. He knows how rightly to present the ever-present small boy; the child in all of us. In some of his finest work you will find pictured the wonder and the fear of boys growing out of innocence or naively active in it, coming into manhood with at times a generous and sour-raw schooling in apprehension; this artist is sensitive to the design that, doubtless, engenders and he knows that there are those in life who having "No Place to Go" slump into a human lump against the stark geometry of a show-place.

With "Aquarium" and "Japanese Kites," Anderson offers an almost flawless treatment of a subject that appeals to him most deeply, in form and color refreshingly his own. "Aquarium" delicately fuses marine life and boys who observe, locking the kids and life into meaningful, poetic mood so that the space and tone notation share pointed wonderfully for our view and feel.

But it is in the "Japanese Kites" that we may have the outstanding achievement in this richly-presented show. The artist may be unaware that in modern poetry there is a lyric by e. e. cummings with this simple teaching: sending a kite out into the blue is so exhilarating why, in heaven's name do we, become adult, ever let go? Viewing this picture or reading the poem helps us open our hearts to a small treasure provided by talent for understanding and reassurance.

These paintings, sketches, watercolors, and drawings will remain on view till Dec. 26. They may be seen daily from 1 o'clock in the afternoon to closing. Here you will find proof of how the contemporary artist works only with subject matter over which he has absolute control; you will find that he brings order of his own and sympathetic treatment to an experience which all of us can share.
