The Sunday Spotlight Record Recommendations

By WILLIAM L. DOUDNA

Perhaps this recording has been called to your attention before, but today I'd like to acquaint or reacquaint you with the splendid Walter Gieseking's performance in the Schumann "Carnival" on a Columbia LP.

Recorded brilliantly from an engineering standpoint, the disc is a virtually perfect demonstration of Gieseking's ability to produce startling bursts of power and equally remarkable periods of quiet. On the same record are two painstaking performances of Mozart sonatas—those numbered 14 and 15.

Boston Symphony orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting (Victor): As fine as any LP recording of Liszt's "Les Preludes" as you'll find on wax, with the orchestra giving great sound as Monteux leads it with freedom and balance. Paired with it is a worthy performance of Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy." Roger Voisin's trumpet is something to hear. First-rate engineering.

Bronislav Huberman and the Vienna Philharmonic, George Szell conducting (Columbia): A reissue of the 1933 recording, with the comparatively youthful Szell conducting outstandingly, at times, the soloist's work. Many will quarrel with Huberman's handling of the cadenza, but few will question his sense of phrase, and of drama.

Arthur Schnabel and the Philadelphia orchestra under I. Dobrowen (Victor): Another reissue. Worth having, but less authoritative than Schnabel's earlier work with Frederick Stock.

Fabienne Jacquot (MGM): A lively and sometimes brilliant playing of Saint-Saens' "Egyptian" concerto, paired with a less effective rendition of D'Indy's "Symphony on a French Mountain Air," which calls for a smoother, warmer playing.

Victor Symphony orchestra under Leopold Stokowski (Victor): Tchaikovsky's "Aurora's Wedding," a beautiful piece of work with some outstanding solo passages, although some of the tempo isn't what the dancers might like. The second side has the conductor's transcriptions of "Humoresque" and "Solitude."

Zinka Milanov (Victor): a collection of arias emphasizing the artistic integrity as well as the effective range of this soprano. On the disc are excerpts from "Aida," "Il Trovatore," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Lo Forza del Destino," and "La Gioconda."

London Philharmonic under Sir Thomas Beecham (Columbia): Four Mozart symphonies on two LPs—Nos. 29 and 34 on one, 35 and 36 on the other. These are reissues, taken from 78-rpm records, but you'd never know it. The sound is most remarkable, especially on the first pair. As for the performance—well, it's Beecham and Mozart.

Sleeping Buddha Is Giant Figure

The left shoulder of the Sleeping Buddha is almost as far above the ground as the top of a two-story house.

Thousands of pilgrims go to see this mighty statue. Their minds often travel to the idea of nirvana. If you asked one to explain what he meant by nirvana, he might reply: "It is a joyful state of being, without pain or hate or anger. The Buddha now has the happiness of nirvana."

City Fell to Ruins
 The Sleeping Buddha is among the remains of an ancient city, known as Polonnaruwa. This city was important long ago, but it fell to ruins.

Another lost city of Ceylon carries the name of Anuradhapura. It also was a center of the Buddhist faith. The name means City of Ninety Kings, and some say that it was the center of power for 38 monarchs.

Old records tell us that the city contained many thousands of houses, but there is little trace of them at the present time. We do see, however, the remains of stone temples and other buildings. The largest building was the Brazen Palace, and hundreds of stone pillars (which held up parts of the roof) still exist.

Had Ivory Throne
 An ancient account of the Brazen Palace describes it in this way: "It was 100 cubits (about 150 feet) in height. There were nine stories, and each story had 100 apartments. The rooms were adorned with carved flowers which were covered with gold and set with gems.

"The king caused a large hall to be built in the middle of the first floor of the palace. This hall was supported on gold-covered pillars and there were images of lions and other animals. In the center of the hall was an ivory throne, with a golden emblem of the sun on one side, and a silver emblem of the moon on the other side.

"The throne was covered with cloth of great value, and on it was placed a beautiful ivory fan."

Author-Engineer Steuber's Book to Be Read on Radio

William F. Steuber's varied talents will be emphasized for radio listeners this week. The audience of WHA and the state network will hear him as an engineer and will hear of him as an author.

Steuber broadcasts road condition reports daily over the 10 stations of the Wisconsin State Broadcasting service. He speaks at 8:27 a. m. as an engineer of the state highway department. The program is designed to inform drivers about detours and roads under construction as well as about icy and snowbound highways.

Steuber's talent for writing will be exhibited by the state stations beginning Monday, when "Chapter a Day" will present his book, "Us Incorporated."

Norman Michie will read the book at 1 p. m. Monday through Friday.

"Us Incorporated" has nothing to do with either engineering or radio. It is about boys.

Ionosphere 'Whistlers' Studied in California

STANFORD, Calif. (AP)—Stanford University's electrical engineers are eavesdropping on mysterious "whistlers" in the ionosphere 700 miles beyond the earth's surface for clues to the makeup of that outer region which man must know before he attempts space travel.

The so-called whistlers sound more like a buggy-whip lashing through the air. Scientists here believe they are caused by bundles of electro-magnetic energy set loose by lightning flashes.

Some whistlers, research indicates here, methodically are back and forth between two distant points of earth, passing en route through the outer ionosphere.

The strange sounds eventually also might point the way toward less expensive long-distance telephone calls. Indications are they could be used instead of powerful transmitters.

The Air Force's Cambridge Research Center is financing the study.
