The Baseball Play-by-Play Boys Said Figure-Drunk, Record-Crazy

(While John Crosby is on vacation, his column will be continued by a number of guest writers.)

By RICHARD MANEY

The play-by-play boys, those dedicated folk who report the ball games to radio and television vagrants, are getting out of hand.

Most of them are figure-drunk, record-crazy. All of them are frustrated Boswells — of the James rather than the Connie persuasion.

The mere sight of a fugitive from the Cotton States League shuffling up to the plate causes them to break out in a rash of statistics unequalled in scope and treachery since the last time you tried to establish the validity of 3.1416.

In an earlier and happier day the micromaniac assigned to running detail would have been content to give the name and position of the jughead, and as a fillip to the faithful might even have tossed in his batting average.

But times have changed, men. Today the hysteric in charge of oral operations is surrounded by a battery of actuaries, analysts, calculators, chart drafters, and historians, all boiling with minutiae about the culprit who will shortly foul out to the catcher.

Every favorable facet of the churl's character is bared and gilded. The unfavorable facets? Keep a civil tongue in your head. Think the man wants to be fired?

As the victim of this panegyric weaves up to the dish, as he sweats out the count to 3 and 2, the speaker touches on his family, his academic background, his previous condition of servitude.

He hoses the audience with trivia about his appetites and his allergies, his draft status, his literary tastes, his birthmarks and his ambitions.

Having explored the man, X-rayed his character, the investigator now comes to grips with the athlete. It's quite a scuffle.

The pitchman overwhelms his listeners with reams of arithmetic in an attempt to establish the defensive and offensive potential of this candidate for Coopers-town.

Last year he hit .360 for El Dorado, .380 under the lights, .230 in the afternoon. Against left-handers he was something short of lethal, .202. He drove in 108 runs, but left 234 of his comrades on base.

The lecturer tosses in the weight, height, and age of the man on trial, in a spasm of enthusiasm hints that he looks like George Sisler, has the stance of Musial, the speed of Bruton, the fielding skill of Dom DiMaggio.

In spite of these suspicions the forwarding address of the prodigy, as of a week from Saturday, will be Pueblo, Colorado.

I'm laying it on too thick? Time wouldn't permit such a farrago of figures? Of vital statistics? Rubbish! Time is a drug on the market in today's ball games.

In a three-hour contest the ball is actually in play about twelve minutes. Any stop watch will prove it. Cued by the chronic inaction of the contestants, the play-by-play men seek to fill up the void with words, with mathematical formulas and calculations.

But one may pick up some fascinating information listening to a baseball broadcast.

Recently, drowsing through a Dodger-Brave game originating in Birmingham, Ala., I was electrified when Vince Scully, presiding at the microphone, announced that Don Hoak, a rookie with an eye on Billy Cox's job, had been married in a night ceremony at home plate in Fort Worth, last summer.

Hoak then went thirty times to bat without getting a hit. What's more, said Scully, three other athletes had been married at that same Ft. Worth plate, all at night, and in each case the groom had been overtaken by misfortune.

I don't know what Scully made of all this because just then Mathews struck out to end the inning, and Vince went into an anthem to his sponsor. If he was furtively attacking the institution of matrimony, I think Tommy Manville should have equal time for rebuttal.
