

Understanding CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI

There's a happy medium in any sort of practice. That is something all mothers should realize in dealing with children. Mrs. Nicely has a fine sturdy son of 11 years. He is intelligent, active and healthy in mind and body. If his mother persists in her present line of discipline he will not remain the fine boy he is now.

Mrs. Nicely always has an eye and an ear toward the neighbors. She wants to impress them with her fine qualities. Her house must be perfectly up to the last fashion magazines' word. Her dress must be the top style. Her son must be an ideal child with perfect manners. The manners also must be the latest style.

First his looks come in for attention. His hair style, his clothes from necktie to shoes, his hands with special attention to the nails, all must be correct. Now Sylvester hates short pants. He wants his knees covered. He likes beyond anything else to play ball on the lot with the other "kids." He can play with the best of them but what about his clothes, his hands and the sweaty plastered hair? This causes constant friction in the household for Dad is on Sylvester's side.

But a worse horror awaits Sylvester. Every two weeks his mother entertains the Bridge Club. On that afternoon Sylvester is ordered to come straight home from school, take a bath and change his clothes ad come into the room where the guests are assembled. He is to go around the room, shake hands, bowing from the waist, and then seat himself nearby ready to wait on any lady who appears to want an ash tray or a drink.

On the recent occasion of the Club meeting Sylvester did not go home. He went to play ball and did not get home until time for dinner, long after the guests had gone. It must be confessed that the naughty boy watched to make sure the last one had gone before he put in his appearance.

His mother was in a dither. What troubled her most was what the ladies would think. What excuse could she make for Sylvester's non-appearance? She was embarrassed beyond words. What was to be done with such a boy?

The answer is easy. Let the boy be a boy in the years of his childhood and stop trying to make him a tidy-mannered adult. Surely he must be taught good manners. That does not imply that he must be held in durance among elderly people who have no use for him nor he for them.

Intelligent children absorb good manners from their parents. They will hate the thought of them if they are made to be "too nice."

LOOKING AT LIFE

By ERICH BRANDEIS

According to an organization called the Relaxation Club, which has just made a survey of its members, the most "relaxed" city in America is Philadelphia.

Drivers swear less in Philadelphia; policemen just give you your ticket without making a speech; local radio and TV shows are more easy going; and people are more restrained and refined and never boast about their city.

That may all be so. But perhaps it is due to Philadelphia's relaxing atmosphere that the city has grown to a much lesser degree than many other American cities, such as Los Angeles, Detroit, Chicago, Fort Worth, Dayton—and even New York, the city that certainly doesn't talk about itself but cannot, by any flight of the imagination, be called a "relaxed" city.

I don't think how true the story is. It was told me by another Englishman.

Philadelphiaans, the survey brought out, never talk about themselves.

I admit that it is considered bad manners if an INDIVIDUAL talks about himself.

That is just like a newspaper talking about a completely unknown person as "the famous Mr. X" or "Miss Y, the internationally known singer."

Labeling a person famous—particularly if that person is yourself—does not make him famous. Talking about yourself may be compared with telling the store clerk to leave the price tag on a birthday or a wedding gift, provided the gift is sufficiently expensive.

But cities and towns SHOULD talk about themselves. How else is the world going to know about their advantages?

Where would Miami be if it hadn't talked and talked about itself? Or Atlantic City, or Hollywood?

My hat is off to all the aggressive chambers of commerce and other organizations, no matter what their names may be, which constantly tout their communities.

That is the stuff of which PROGRESS is made. That is the cheese which attracts the mice—whether these mice be tourists, businesses, capital or what have you.

I am for ever bigger and better cheese!

Advice on Your HEALTH

By HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

The body has to have enough fuel for the production of heat and energy. The fuel that the body can use most easily is sugar. When there is too much sugar in the blood, the condition is known as diabetes, which, in turn, is due to a lack of a secretion from the pancreas called insulin.

But the opposite can also exist; that is, too little sugar in the blood, condition called glycemia.

Hypoglycemia may be produced by a variety of disorders.

For example, it can be brought on by starvation or by giving too much insulin. A tumor of the pancreas may also produce it. In such cases, the patient may become unconscious. The blood sugar also may drop below normal in certain conditions of the other glands of internal secretion and severe liver disease.

Most Common Kind

The most common kind however, occurs in persons who are high strung and thin, who have digestive upsets and who are likely to have high fever with mild infections. The attacks come on at any time, particularly when the person is under strain of some sort, whether mental or physical. They usually do not occur before breakfast.

Fortunately, the attacks do not get progressively worse or more frequent, but, especially in children, tend to lessen and often may disappear entirely.

Proteins Beneficial

It is believed that this condition is brought on by an overproduction of insulin due to the taking in of too much sugar. On the other hand, the attacks may be prevented or lessened by using a diet high in protein foods, such as meat, milk, and eggs, together with fatty foods, and low in starchy foods and sugars.

It is also helpful to avoid excitement and anxiety, and to have children lead an ordinary life with plenty of rest and proper relaxation.

Persons who suffer from fainting spells or attacks of weakness should have a careful study, including a laboratory test, to determine if the body is utilizing sugars satisfactorily.
