Firm Hails New Drug For Arthritis Victims

NEW YORK, March 1—(AP)—A potent new drug tested on 1,000 patients looks exceptionally effective for safe control of rheumatoid arthritis, a drug firm said today.

The drug is melacortandracin, or Melicortin (trade name). It's a man-made cousin of your own adrenal gland hormone cortisone and a related hormone, hydrocortisone.

Melacortandracin now is generally available by doctor's prescription, after tests finding it better than 25 per cent effective against severe arthritis, estimated to afflict 7 to 12 million Americans, said officials of Schering corporation, Bloomfield, N. J.

Preliminary results with this drug were first reported in November to the American Rheumatism Association. Since then it has been tried clinically on arthritis and other diseases by 103 physicians.
