Jacoby on Bridge

By OSWALD JACOBY. Shed a tear of sympathy for poor South in today's hand. If you'd been playing his hand at five, diamonds you might have made the same mistake that he did. Just follow the play and see for yourself. West opened the king of spades and continued with another spade, South ruffing the second trick. South led the ace of trumps to find out how the suit was going to break, and East discarded a heart. Everything pretty normal so far? Perhaps you wonder which strange mistake South is going to make? You can stop wondering, for South has already made the fatal error. The ace of trumps was a mistake!

Fix It Yourself

By HUBBARD COBB (The Handy Man). REMOVING OIL PAINT FROM WALLS AND CEILINGS.

Feeling an allergizing paint is never much fun to have around but when it occurs on a ceiling, it's real grim. Best solution is to strip off all the old paint and then start off with a fresh smooth surface. About the best way to remove paint from a surface like a ceiling or wall is with a paste type paint remover. This type remover has sufficient body so that it can be brushed over the surface and will stay put and not run off. The paste remover is applied with a brush and you want a rather heavy coat. Allow it to act on the paint until the paint becomes soft and then use a broad blade putty knife or scraper to remove the softened paint. If there are several coats of paint on the ceiling or wall, two or maybe even three coats of the remover will be necessary to get them soft. In any event, let the remover work until the paint is soft. If you try to scrape off semi-soft paint you may damage the plaster with your scraper or putty knife not to mention making more work for yourself. Before you start working indoors with a paste remover you want to be sure that the floor, woodwork and surfaces that are to be left as is are protected so that the remover won't get on them and spoil the finish. Cover electric outlets with masking tape. After you've got the point off the surface with the remover, give it a light sanding if necessary. Paste type paint removers, like the liquid type, are effective on oil-paints but not on calcimine or water thinned paints. For these, water and a brush are about the best things to use as a remover.
