

Understanding CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI
The first and most important thing a teacher has to do, the one thing that means success or failure in his work, is understanding the children and youth he teaches.

The good children are either very bright or very dull. The dull ones soon indicate their deficiencies and are taken care of in the special classes. But the bright ones, those with enough initiative to do the unusual, startle and annoy their teachers, and the uninspired or inexperienced teachers try to suppress them by the result that there is a constant battle between them. The pupil dislikes the teacher who heartily returns the feeling, with a resultant loss of growth in the pupil and a loss of power in the teacher.

Children who are intelligent enough to want to do differently the usual routine tasks are sensitive. Their actions indicate a keener nervous system, a precocious possession, one that often uncovers gifts. Schools have to have rules and it is in the rules that the pupil breaks. The professional teacher will study the rulebreaker for his underlying idea, sympathize with him and lead him to use his energy and his ideas to the best advantage. He will not dislike the pupil, call him such names as "dope" nuisance, etcetera. He will not ask the class to side with him by asking, "What do you think of this?"

School routines meet the requirements of the major number of the pupils. Any break in the routine annoys the administrators and teachers unless they accept the fact that school is for all the children, all the students, and so accept the unusual, annoying child or adolescent boy or girl as normal in the situation.

A pupil may, for example, go on his own to further a cause that the whole school is engaged in. He may be running a risk to himself, he may be getting in the way of the organized movement. He does not intend to be annoying. What he really is doing is trying to take the lead in the movement, he is important to it. He does not merit punishment. He needs no scolding, but he does need leadership. These children and youth are highly valuable in a democratic community. The teachers can help to develop their potential abilities if they will try to understand them, as some do every day.

Jacoby on Bridge Sets South Two

By OSWALD JACOBY
There shouldn't be much to the play of the hand shown today. South has several different ways to develop nine tricks, and almost any way of losing his contract. It wasn't easy to find a way to do it.

West hesitatingly played the jack of spades, and dummy won with the king. South's bidding indicated that he had only a doubleton spade, so West knew that his play could be made. The idea was to persuade declarer that West had put up the jack of spades from a holding that included the queen also.

After some indecision, South returned a low diamond from the dummy and finessed the jack. West won with the queen of diamonds and switched to a low heart. East took the ace of hearts and returned a spade, and once more South finessed the ace and lost to the queen.

West returned a heart, and South was obliged to win with the king. At this stage South had nine tricks available: three clubs, three diamonds, two spades and one heart. Since declarer had already lost three tricks, the best he could hope for was to make one overtrick.

Any sensible bridge player would take his safe spades and play no attention at all to the play for an extra trick. As it happened, however, the declarer was not in a sensible mood. He led a spade from his hand and finessed dummy's ten, losing to the queen. East then cashed the rest of the hearts, thus setting the contract two.

While you're sniffing at South's fallacious line of play, don't forget to give a look and look for a fine deceptively play. If West hadn't put up the jack of spades at the second trick, South couldn't have gone wrong on the hand.

Q-With neither side vulnerable, the bidding has been: 1 Heart 2 Clubs 3 You, South, hold: 47 WKJ642 6AKJ976 45 What do you do? A-Bid four no-trump. The strong hand and the two starters make this an ideal hand to check for ace.

TODAY'S QUESTION
The bidding is the same as in the question just answered. You, South, hold: 47 WKJ642 6AKJ976 45 What do you do? Answer Tomorrow

Advice on Your HEALTH

By HERMAN BUNDESEN, M.D.
To many of you, an operation is a frightening and dreaded ordeal. While no one looks forward to surgery, you should not build up needless fears.

Probably your main concern is about being anesthetized. You're afraid you will go to sleep and not wake up. Perhaps a discussion about anesthesia and just how safe it actually is will help you ease your fears.

The most widely employed inhalation anesthetic today is used either alone or in combination with other agents. But there are others, including: ethylene, cyclopropane, divinyl ether (synthane) and trichlorethylene (trulene).

Intravenous anesthesia has become increasingly popular and is currently used for more than one-fourth of all anesthetics. The most commonly employed agent is thiopental sodium. But there are others, including: sodium pentothal, sodium barbital and sodium amobarbital.

When ether alone was used the death rate was only one per 2,500 anesthetics. It was one per 5,000 anesthetics with cyclopropane and one per 14,000 with ethylene.

Sometimes, however, these extremely safe agents alone do not produce sufficient muscular relaxation for surgery. Then, a muscle-relaxing agent like curare, the South American arrow poison, must be used along with the primary anesthetic drug. The danger is greater in such cases, but even so, the Harvard study showed one death for every 712 anesthetics. And use of a new muscle-relaxer, diazepam, promises even greater safety.

So, you see, your chances of surviving any operation today are excellent.
