Understanding CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI "Our little girl is almost four years old now and she wants to read." She brings us a book, a newspaper, anything with print, and says, "Help me read what it says. Should we teach her to read? And how do we do it without making it hard for her later on?"

Usually a child as young as four does not really read. He is interested in reading because he sees his family reading. He probably has inherited their love of it, and this is showing early. By all means help her to read.

Take the child up, hold the picture book with him, (the newspaper is not the best form for this "reading"), and guide his finger along the line, read it for him, talk about the picture and allow him, coax him, to talk about it. Help him, if he allows, to weave a story about the picture. This sort of experience is part of what teachers call "reading readiness."

No attempt should be made at this time to teach words as words, or to drill the child on the recognition of letters or words. What he wants and needs at the moment is the feeling for the printed words, the meaning of them as they lie under the picture. The word recognition, the alphabet and the phonetic elements will come later.

The first "reading" books should be picture books with the large type text, usually a few words about the picture. Those words should be name words, mainly. If the picture is of a dog, there should be the word "dog" in a prominent place. The young reader will learn the sentence under the picture, but he will not be reading in the sense we use the term. He "reads" by location, association with the picture. Let that be so and be sure not to try to get this very young scholar to identify words by drill on them. This "lesson" is a pleasure lesson, something he asked for and enjoys.

Any question a child asks should be answered as truthfully and as accurately as possible. When he asks for information, he wanted it. Give it to him briefly and in terms he understands without elaboration. When he asks for help to read a word, trace it with his finger as to its limit its space and pronounce it once and stop there.

We found that when a child had been taught to read before he entered school, he was likely to be confused by the difference between the method used by the teacher and that used at home. As a usual thing, reading readiness experiences are well offered at home, where books are part of daily living and the six-year-old is ready for formal teaching when he gets to class.

NEW ANTIBIOTIC HAILED BY MEDICAL TESTERS

NEW YORK, Nov. 13 — (AP) Scientists of the New York Medical College said today that a new antibiotic, cycloserine, has proved effective against a wide variety of diseases in humans—particularly tuberculosis.

The scientists said the new antibiotic—called "CS"—proved effective in man after showing "disappointing anti-microbial activity in animals."

This experience, they said, should mean a recheck of the "tons of thousands of antibiotics discarded without clinical testing on man" because tests only on animals were unsatisfactory.

Dr. Lois Lillick, director of the college's department of bacteriology, said "CS" also has been used successfully in cases of bronchitis; laryngitis; chronic-upper-respiratory infections, including sinusitis; acute diarrhea, and a wide variety of acute infections.

She said "CS" might become a "major weapon" against TB, and with "little of the side effects" of streptomycin.

Concurring in Dr. Lillick's opinion was Dr. Michael G. Mulinos, associate professor of pharmacology at the college.

However, all of the scientists emphasized that "many months of additional testing will be needed before a final appraisal of cycloserine can be made."
