

Lineup Of Celebrities Will Inaugurate Treasury Hour

Four Girls To Match Wits With Navymen On Quiz Program; Dodger Fan To Be Head

Nino Martini, Joe E. Brown, Joe DiMaggio and Maj. Edward Bowes head the lineup of celebrities which will inaugurate the "Treasury Hour" over WJZ Tuesday, at 8 p. m.

Graham McNamee, as master of ceremonies, will blend the talents of these celebrities into an hour long program promoting the sale of United State Defense Savings Bonds and Stamps over facilities donated to the government by the Bendix Aviation Corp.

Barry Wood, the popular singing star, will be a "regular" on the "Treasury Hour," singing Irving Berlin's "Any Bonds Today?", the program's theme song, and other numbers.

The Navy's choice—four of the six girls picked as the nation's most beautiful in a poll of U. S. sailors and then featured in the saltwater film musical, "Navy Blues"—will have a chance to match wits with four navymen on "Battle of the Sexes," Tuesday. The quiz session will be broadcast at 9 p. m., over WFAF.

The glamor girls are Kay Aldridge, who hails from Virginia; Georgia Carroll, from Dallas, Tex.; Lorraine Gettman, of Davenport, Ia., and Marguerite Chapman, of White Plains, N. Y.

Little Mary Ann Mercer, vocal star of "College Humor," will feature the popular "I Guess I'll Have To Dream The Rest" during the campus comedy Tuesday over WFAF.

The Brooklyn Dodgers' most loyal fan, Private Murray Woldenburg, who wouldn't even allow his superior officer at Camp Wheeler, Ga., to refer to his favorite baseball team as "them bums," will be Eddie Dowling's guest on "We, The People," Tuesday at 9 p. m., over WABC.
