H. V. Kaltenborn, dean of radio news commentators; Raymond Swing, radio news analyst; and William L. Shuer, radio commentator and author of "Berlin Diary," will debate the question, and other expert viewpoints will be added by the guest speakers, Joseph C. Grew, under secretary of state; Com. Harold E. Stassen, former governor of Minnesota; and Sen. Tom Connally (D-Tex), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations committee. George V. Denny, Jr., will preside as moderator.

The fuel that powers our great fleets of bombers and fighters, 100-octane gasoline, is the subject of the drama on "Weapons for Victory," the Army Service Forces series, on Thursday at 4.30 p. m., over Station WABC. A few years ago, 100-octane gasoline represented the ultimate in gasoline, a fuel which represented 100 per cent perfection and could not be improved. Today, thanks to new petroleum cracking processes, the gasoline which once was a laboratory curiosity is produced in enormous quantities, giving our airplanes and other gasoline-powered equipment speed, range and power beyond anything attainable by the enemy.
