Helen Matheson, of The on the final Wisconsin Players 48 season:

"Amphitryon 38" is the story of an amorous god and a virtuous woman's effort to outwit him.

It's the sort of glossy, sophisticated, inconsequential play that might have been written for the Lunts. It wasn't; it was rewritten for them. But the current version of S. N. Behrman demands the Lunt's deft touch.

The Wisconsin Players undertook it earnestly and with considerable skill Monday night, but it didn't quite go over.

Making such a wisp into firm and shapely entertainment apparently requires more than amateur talent. It needs knowingness and utter assurance and perhaps a touch of theatrical genius.

Anyway, the Players made a good try.

David Weiss made a wry and handsome Jupiter, reluctantly brought to the realization that immortality isn't all it's thought to be, and Barbara Lebby was convincing as the lovely mortal who lured him down from heaven.

Richard Gill, James Bran-
