Orpheum

FEATURE: Cheaper by the Dozen

TYPE: Comedy, from a true story

CAST: Frank Bunker Gilbreth, Clifton Webb; Mrs. Lillian Gilbreth, Myrna Loy; Ann Gilbreth, Jeanne Crain, and Ernestine Gilbreth, Barbara Bates.

REVIEWER: Dorothy French

Story: In 1921 efficiency expert Frank Gilbreth neatly arranged his 11 children in his Pierce Arrow and moved, untroubled, from Providence, R. I., to Montclair, N. J. There the family expands to an even dozen, and copes satisfactorily with an epidemic of whooping cough, the growing pains of teenage daughters, the representative of birth control league, the comments of awed onlookers, and death.

(It is Father Gilbreth, stubborn and individualistic, around whom the family comedy and pathos revolves.

HIGH POINTS: The script... Myrna Loy convincing and heart-warming as the mother of 12... Father Gilbreth takes his seven oldest children to the principal of the grade school to enroll five and display two "to show you the kind of crop we're raising at our house"...

Father demonstrates how his children have learned to bathe in one minute flat, and experiments to discover that vests button 1 1/2 seconds faster if one starts at the bottom and works up... Father chaperones his oldest daughter at a high school prom and earns the social spotlight dancing the Toddle with lipsticked, perfumed young things he has preached against.

LOW POINTS: Technicolor wasted except in showing up the family's varying shades of red hair... The possible miscasting of Clifton Webb, who more often seemed like the haughty bachelor of his Mr. Belvedere role, than like an understanding, though eccentric father of a dozen children... Family relationships perhaps too ideal to be convincing.

VERDICT: A sure source of laughs now and chuckles in the future, with perhaps a lesson in family living thrown in.

Madison

FEATURE: Tight Little Island. Type: Quaint comedy that is practically unique—it didn't cost a million dollars to produce and there's not a single big name in the cast.

REVIEWER: Helen Matheson.

CAST: Capt. Waggett, Basil Radford; Sgt. Odd, Bruce Steon; Peggy, Joan Greenwood; George Campbell, Gordon Jackson.

STORY: Catastrophe—ghastly and soul-searing—strikes the lonely Scottish isle of Todday in the midst of the war. The island runs completely out of whisky. The villagers withdraw to their cottages and sit in corners, brooding. Women weep and once-kindly men snarl. School children write pitiful essays on the tragedy. One venerable Scot takes himself to his bed to die.

And then, incredible, miraculous, but true—a ship bearing 50,000 cases of whisky founders on Todday and is abandoned by its crew.

HIGH POINTS: The news of the dreadful drought comes to Todday and the men of the island totter away to face their sorrow alone... 100 per cent of the hamlet's male population races to boats at midnight to relieve the sinking ship of its cargo; then the church clock sounds the start of the Sabbath, and the men—conscience surmounting thirst—sadly turn back... the whisky salvaged at last, the Scots go on a glorious drunk until an officious Englishman takes it on himself to report the situation to the customs men... and the villagers take desperate measures to protect their treasure.

VERDICT: Delightful.
