Readers' Loans to Newspaper Reach $2,000

PEKIN, Ind. (UP) — Newspaper publisher Victor Green banked $2,000 Wednesday in "loans" from sympathetic readers in his tax fight with federal agents and appealed for $4,000 more to keep his office from being padlocked.

"We're one-third of the way toward our goal," Green said as he opened bags of mail containing from $1 to $50 in response to a front-page "SOS" for help in his four weekly newspapers.

He said money came from as far away as 100 miles, and one reader wrote that he would organize a group of farmers "to get their shotguns out if they try to padlock your door."

Blames Bureau

Green blamed his plight on a change in the Internal Revenue Bureau's interpretation of tax liability on a park he established "as a public service."

He said he had been deducting park expenses as non-taxable money, but that a new ruling required him to pay "about $6,000" in back taxes by June 1.

Revenue officials declined comment on the case because tax files are confidential.

But Indianapolis collector Wilbur O. Plummer said he wished he could open the files "so everybody would know the truth about this case."

Green countered by asking Plummer to ignore the rules and make the files public.
