Armstrong Does Moonlight Dance to Aid Footwork

By JACK CUDDY
[United Press Staff Correspondent]

POMPTON LAKES, N. J. — Henry (Two-Crown) Armstrong is doing pantomime sparring at night to fashion his footwork properly for Wednesday's lightweight title fight with Champion Lou Ambers.

Henry's manager, rotund Eddie Mead, claims this is the first time any modern challenger ever did night training.

As the moon silvers the maples on the lake shore, Armstrong climbs into the outdoor ring and goes through three fast rounds of pantomime with Lew Feldman of Brooklyn. Dark-haired Feldman is a jumping jack scrapper like Ambers. No blows are struck. Footwork's the thing. It's like berserk dancers playing tag in the moonlight.

"We've been doing this for more than a week now," Mead explained. "We had to do it because Henry's footwork was too sluggish. He was missing Feldman a mile in the afternoons and almost plunging through the ropes at times."

Mead emphasized that this night pantomime had improved Henry's footwork "more than a hundred per cent." It has given the bull-shouldered Los Angeles challenger a zig-zagging attack.

Armstrong still wore a black, protective mask to allow facial injuries to heal.
