ROBERT WEEDE, a personable and happy soul with a voice to match, gave his first Madison concert Friday night, singing at the Wisconsin Union theater. He replaced Graciela Rivera, soprano who was having such success in opera in South America that her tour was extended.

Weede was a satisfying choice to fill the vacancy. His large and pliable voice kept the audience both pleased and expectant, for he gave it, with equal facility, familiar arias and songs and melodies new to the listeners.

Weede's voice sounded best in such things as Pierne's lovely "En Barque" and Hans Hermann's dramatic "Three Wanderers." His sense of theater got full play in the "Soliloquy" from "Carousel" and "Non Piu Andrai" from "The Marriage of Figaro," both of which also lent themselves to his feeling for comedy.

This latter trait reached its peak in a character song called "The Animal Man," which in dialect listed the animals of the ark and praised Noah's qualifications as a stock man; it recalled Mozart's and Rossini's cataloguing arias.

Rodgers' "Soliloquy" opened the concert instead of the programmed "Songs of the Fair" by Martin because, Weede explained, his music had been lost somewhere between Bogota, Colombia, and Madison and he hadn't been able to replace it.

He also omitted the "Lasciatemi Morire" from "Arianna" in favor of Broggi's "Visione Veneziana," saying that the audience would probably prefer not hearing a lamentation on such a beautiful night.

The program was interlaced with Weede's commentary. He obviously fancied himself something of a comedian—and, most of the time, he was right. In a summer concert, one expects and usually welcomes such light approach to light music.

Nevertheless, his seriousness was sincere in the familiar "Eri Tu" and "Di Provenza," both of which received excellent operatic treatment. Voice students probably noticed his remarkably controlled breathing, too.

Truman's Personal Delegate Gets His Voting Instructions

KANSAS CITY, Mo. —(UP)— Tom Gavin had his Democratic National convention voting instructions Friday from President Truman, but he said he would not reveal them until the Missouri roll is called in Chicago next week.

Gavin, who has been harder to find than a nickel cup of coffee since he was named as President Truman's personal voting representative at the convention, told George Wallace of the Kansas City Star that he had received his "complete instructions" from Mr. Truman.

The instructions, Gavin said, "include not only for whom I shall cast his vote for the presidential nomination, but also as to any committee assignments that may come to me."

Gavin skyrocketed into the national limelight as the man who would receive the "word" from the White House. It was reported Gavin was unable to see Mr. Truman this week in Washington because of the President's confinement in Walter Reed hospital.

Gavin told Wallace, however, that he received his instructions in Washington this week.

Labor Institute at U.W. Closes

41 Steelworkers Complete Classes

A week of classes in collective bargaining labor, and world affairs closed Friday night when University of Wisconsin "graduation exercises" were held for 41 Midwestern members of the United Steelworkers Institute, sponsored by the School for Workers.

Participating in the ceremonies were Lorentz H. Adolfson, Extension Division director; Walter Burke, CIO Steelworkers regional director, Milwaukee; and Edwin Young, School for Workers director.

Labor Adviser Speaks

Highlight of the institute was a talk on international affairs Thursda by Robert Oliver, government labor adviser of the Mutual Security Agency, Washington.

"Democracy bulwarked at bargain insurance rates" was Oliver's definition of America's foreign aid policy.

"What a small price we pay for this insurance to make democracy impregnable," he said. "Remember that the whole program represents only 2 per cent of our gross national production."

Makes 3 Points

Why we must aid Europe, why we have a Mutual Security Agency, were explained by Oliver as he made these points:

ONE. Europe, still staggering under the economic blows of World War II, must now build defenses for the whole free world against the threat of Soviet aggression.

TWO. We can't split economic and military aid—Allies need our help not only with guns and planes, but also with houses, roads, and living standards if they are to give vigorous support to our foreign policy objectives.

THREE. Our security is menaced if Europe's production capacity and manpower fall into Soviet hands.

FOUR. We depend on the rest of the world—disaster faces us if there should be a Soviet diversion of the raw materials we import, one-fourth of the material we use industrially.
