

Discovery in Radios Please Late-Risers

keeping people awake when they want to sleep, and radio industry, but now a new gadget has been developed without the harsh ruthlessness of an alarm company has announced the development of a "Bedside" which will cost about $28. Before retiring, you tune radio station, when you turn which later after you're asleep. In the morning, at the dreaded hour, the radio will begin playing music or whatever else you have it set for (you'll have to know your programs).

If things are especially tough that morning, an extra special "auxiliary resonator" will sound off a few minutes after the "wake-up" music, and, as the inventor of the instrument pointed out "God help you if you don't get up then."

Glamorous screen actress Lucille Ball will be one of the judges when Dunninger, the Master Mentalist, launches his Dunninger show at 8 p. m. Tuesday over NBC.

Ghoul and calculating as his plans may be, radio headliner, Berry Kroeger discovers that a spring shower is an all-wet alibi for that "perfect crime," when he appears behind the creaking door as guest ghost in "Eight Steps to Murder" a dripping with murder "Inner Sanctum" mystery to be broadcast at 8 p. m. Tuesday over CBS.
