Barclay on Bridge

By SHEPARD BARCLAY

No amount of bridge knowledge is worth a cent if you are in such a hurry that you don't think about what you are doing. Even the world's greatest players go haywire sometimes in the last rubber of the evening if they are hustling to get it through so they can catch their commuters' train. A top-ranker did one of the most ludicrous things possible recently when he placed himself in position to ruff out the losers of a suit, only to realize too late that he hadn't left enough trumps in the dummy to take care of them all.

You can hardly blame South for his grand slam bid after hearing his partner had the spade A via the Blackwood convention, that he also could bid spades and furthermore that he had a fit for the diamond suit. But you can find plenty of fault with what South did in the play.

The spade K lead was won in dummy. Seeing at a glance that the dummy's clubs could be cut to one by means of a discard on hearts, he promptly ran three rounds of trumps on a "safety play," raked in four hearts for a discard of the club 5, laid down the club A and then realized all of a sudden that he had left only one trump in dummy to ruff two clubs. All of which was impossible, so he lost a club trick and was set.

His friends are still laughing at him. And it didn't make him feel any better to note that the club K was right where he could have caught it in a simple finesse.

Your Week-End Question

In what respects do high-card signals have the same meaning during defense against suit and No Trump contracts, and in what respects do their meanings differ?

Edgewood, Wayland Tie, 6-6; Littell Hurt After 70-Yard Run

BEAVER DAM — Del Littell returned a Wayland Academy punt 70 yards for a touchdown in the first period here Friday to give Edgewood high school's football reserves a 6-6 tie. Edgewood threatened consistently throughout the second half and had the ball on the Wayland one when the game ended. Littell suffered a wrenched knee three plays after his scoring gallop and may be lost for the rest of the season.
